Excerpt: ... Mans Life in the Mental World and After Death Friends: We have this evening to take up the third, and I almost think the most interesting subject of the three to which these talks have been dedicated-- the question of the mind, its world, and what happens after death to man as an intellect, as an intelligence. You may remember that in the first lecture I used a certain term which I borrowed from the late William Kingdon Clifford, the word mind-stuff. Now Professor Clifford was an Agnostic ; perhaps he would have gone even further than that in describing his own mental position. He did not believe in the survival of individual consciousness after death, but thought that the individual consciousness then returned, as he said, into the great ocean of cosmic consciousness. But being a scientific man, and accustomed to find every where that where life or force was manifested there was also present some form of matter serving as a medium for the action of that force, serving as material in which the force became manifest, he argued that as thought was evidently manifest in our world, there must be some particular type of matter which responded to the thought and acted as its medium of manifestation and made it effective . in our world. He argued along the ordinary scientific lines, no further; but he could not refuse to go as far as that. Hence he said that with regard to mind there must be this special mind-stuff, just as in relation to sight you had ether thrown into waves, or in relation to sound the air thrown into waves which convey the vibrations which in the ear are sound. If you think of it for a moment, it will; not seem to you unreasonable--whether you consider the Spirit of man as an immortal Intelligence as we do, or whether you regard it as a temporary m...
